My Darling Lizzie,

We are $1\frac{1}{2}$ hours late. I read your letter about an hour after we started - You know how it made me feel, but there, my darling, I will not grieve you. I suppose it is one of the lessons I must learn, to have no foolish pride where you are concerned but accept everything from you for love sake.

The train shakes so I cannot write ~~very~~ lightly but I know you will still make it out.

I have had a happy
day, dearest.

Flora's Vallette
passed a delightful convalescence as far as she went. She congratulated me warmly
upon my engagement
and said she could wish us nothing better than to see such happiness as has been hers & her husbands. They have been married 6 years now and have two little boys and they still are just lovers, waiting to me another every day

that they are separated their home must be ideal with such love

Will and I went
and visited with the Oberlin friends for about an hour this afternoon, had such a good time. We are now separated from them as they had to decide the matter to make up time.
So Will and I are traveling quite alone together. I think we both feel a great deal more like brother
and sister than ever before. Will, darling,

it is time for us to have our suffertels a - tels across the table, I try to think it is you and how happy I should be, if it were. Do you know, Sweetheart,
it occurred to me
when I was bidding
you goodbye, that the next time I shall anywhere it will be with you. Now, good night and God bless
thee, my own love.
Yours Sunshine
